Following the founding of the Central European University by the Hungarian–American philanthropist George Soros in 1991, the Central European University Press was established in 1993. Reflecting the intellectual strengths and values of its parent institution, the press publishes books on the political philosophy and practices of open society, legal studies, nationalism, human rights, conflict resolution, open media, gender studies, economics, medieval studies, literature, and international relations.

The publishing program of CEU Press focuses on issues of Central and Eastern Europe; it is also committed to the past and present history, society, culture and economy of the countries of the former Soviet Union and its neighbors.

We operate by standards common to university presses, including peer review and editorial committee approval.

Our books are produced regionally and sold internationally.

Part of the CEU Press project to present the most important texts that triggered and shaped the processes of nation-building in Central and Southeast Europe. The aim is to confront ‘mainstream’ and seemingly successful national discourses with each other, thus creating a space for analyzing those narratives of identity which became institutionalized as “national canons.”

Presents and illustrates the development of the ideologies of nation states, the “modern” successors of former empires. The sixty texts from a dozen east-European countries include manifestos, articles, poems or extracts from lengthy studies, written between mid-19th and early 20th centuries. They exemplify the relation between modernism and the creation of nation states. Each text is accompanied by a presentation of its author, and by an analysis of the context in which the respective text was born.

Why, modernism and not modernity? Modernity implies the West, while modernism was the product of the periphery. The editors use it in a stricter sense, giving it a place between romanticism and anti-modernism, spanning from the 1860s until the decade following World War I.

After the volumes focusing on the late enlightenment and the emergence of national romanticism, this is the second of two books that elaborate on the phenomenon of modernism in eastern Europe.

Fifty-one texts illustrate the evolution of modernism in the east-European region. Essays, articles, poems, or excerpts from longer works offer new opportunities of possible comparisons of the respective national cultures, from the different ideological approaches and finessing projects of how to create the modern state – liberal, conservative, socialist and others – to the literary and scientific attempts at squaring the circle of individual and collective identities. They reflect a more sophisticated and critical stance than in the preceding periods. It is also shown how minorities are discovered besides the dominant nations.

The essays in this volume reflect the broader interpretation of culture as a system of shared meanings, values, attitudes and symbolic forms in any sphere of human life. Although thematically diverse, all these studies adhere to the concept of what is sometimes termed the new cultural history or socio-cultural history.

The work opens with a cluster of methodological and historiographical reflections. Topics covered by the thematic sections include confessional and religious life in early modern Europe, symbolism and representation, strife and accommodation among different denominations compelled to live in a common space, order and hierarchy, cracks in the machinery of authority and the threat of disintegration as well as the history of alphabetization, literacy and reading and writing practices.

This book pays tribute to István György Tóth (1956-2005), Head of the Department of Early-Modern History at the Institute of History of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and Professor of History at Central European University (both in Budapest), until his premature death in 2005.

Religious history has experienced an exciting revival over the past few years, with new methodological and theoretical approaches invigorating the field. The time has definitely come for this “new religious history” to arrive in Eastern Europe. This book explores the influence of the Christian churches in Eastern Europe’s social, cultural, and political history. Drawing upon archival sources, the work fills a vacuum as few scholars have systematically explored the history of Christianity in the region.

The result of a three-year project, this collective work challenges readers with questions like: Is secularization a useful concept in understanding the long-term dynamics of religiosity in Eastern Europe? Is the picture of oppression and resistance an accurate way to characterize religious life under communism, or did Christians and communists find ways to co-exist on the local level prior to 1989? And what role did Christians actually play in dissident movements under communism? Perhaps most important is the question: what does the study of Eastern Europe contribute to the broader study of modern Christian history, and what can we learn from the interpretative problems that arise, uniquely, from this region?

Throughout centuries, authorities have put pains into ‘engineering’ their populations by attempting to regulate the birth and child mortality trends in either direction, or striving to achieve a desired ‘population quality’ design. The book contributes to the historical studies pursued in the social policy and population domain by channelling scholarly curiosity towards the less known path of East Europe.

The monograph investigates the origins of state policy toward population and the family in Bulgaria, while reconstructing the evolution of state legislation in the field of social policy toward the family between the two World Wars. It sets the laws regarding family welfare in their framework of a distinctively cultural, historical and political discourse to follow the motives behind the legislative initiatives.

An important contribution to the interdisciplinary field of social history and historical demography, and a link between the ideological roots of social and population policy in the past and of today.

THE LIVING ARCHIVE OF VASIL LEVSKI AND THE MAKING OF BULGARIA’S NATIONAL HERO

MARIA N. TODOROVA

University of Illinois

Documents and analyzes the living archive around the figure of Vasil Levski [1837–1873], arguably the major and only uncontested hero of the Bulgarian national pantheon. The monograph is a historical study, taking as its narrative focus the life, death and posthumous fate of Levski. By exploring the vicissitudes of his heroicization, glorification, appropriations, reinterpretation, commemoration and, finally, canonization, it seeks to engage in broad theoretical debate.

THE OFFICIAL AND THE ALTERNATIVE “BELARUSIANNESS”

University of Warsaw

300 pages, 2010
978-963-9776-68-5
$45.00 / €33.00 / £30.00 cloth

Rejecting the cliché about “weak identity and underdeveloped nationalism,” Bekus argues for the co-existence of two parallel concepts of Belarusianness—the official and the alternative one—which mirrors the current state of the people of Belarus more accurately, and allows for a different interpretation of the interconnection between the democratization and nationalization of Belarusian society.

The monograph describes how the ethno-symbolic nation of the Belarusian nationalists, based on the cultural capital of the Golden Age of the Belarusian past (17th century) competes with the “nation” institutionalized and reified by the numerous civic rituals and social practices under the auspices of the actual post-Soviet Belarusian state.

Comparing the two concepts not only provides understanding of the logic that dominates Belarusian society’s self-description models, but also enables us to evaluate the chances of alternative Belarusianness to win this unequal struggle over identity.

Undertakes a critical analysis of the history of domestic tourism in Yugoslavia under Communism. Despite the central role of tourism in the political making of the Yugoslav socialist state after WWII, the topic has remained neglected as an object of historical research. For many former citizens of Yugoslavia, however, memories of holidaymaking, as well as tourism as a means of livelihood, evoke a sense of the “good life” people enjoyed before the economy, and subsequently the country, fell apart.

The story evolved from the popularization of tourism and holidaymaking among Yugoslav citizens in the 1950s and 1960s to the consumer practices of the 1970s and 1980s. The essays review tourism as a political, economic and social project of the Yugoslav federal state, and as a crucial field of social integration. It investigates how ideologies aimed to turn workers into consumers of “purposeful” leisure, and how these ideas were set against actual practices of recreation and holidaymaking.

Serbia’s national movement of the 1980s and 1990s was not the product of an ancient Serbian national identity, nor was it a creation of powerful political actors looking to capitalize on its mobilizing power. Miller’s subjects are Dobrica Ćosić (a novelist), Mića Popović (a painter) and Borislav Mihajlović Mihiz (a literary critic). These three influential intellectuals helped forge a new Serbian identity that fused older cultural imagery with modern conditions.

WHITEHORN’S WINDMILL

ELIZABETH NOVICKAS

250 pages, 2010
978-963-9776-71-5
$17.95 T / €13.95 / £11.99 paperback

Because of his political views, Kazys Boruta spent years in prison both before and after WWII. In the last phase of his life in Soviet Lithuania, he earned a living by translations published under a pseudonym.

Most of Whitehorn’s Windmill was written in 1942, during the German occupation. Bearing a lyrical style that gives full rein to the oral folktale tradition Lithuania is famous for, the novel is by turns romantic, farcical, fantastic, and tragic. The sense of spirituality that permeates the work reflects Lithuania’s pagan roots that were overlaid with an occasionally over-zealous Catholicism not so very long ago. The pagan imagery is deeply embedded. It is completely fitting within this cosmology that people turn into rocks, understand the language of animals, horses speak and the devil is someone’s neighbor. The story is about the efforts of Whitehorn the miller to find a match for his beautiful daughter, Jurga, against various calamities with and among suitors, neighbors, priests and other inhabitants of the village, and ultimately against the devil’s spell. The interesting plot made the novel popular also as juvenile literature, and has been adapted into a play, a ballet and a musical film.

The result of the author’s extensive practical experience which includes a decade in computer process control using large scale systems, another decade in machine pattern-recognition for vision systems, and nearly a decade dealing with artificial intelligence and expert systems. These real-life projects have taught Vámos a critical appreciation of, and respect for, both abstract theory and the practical methodology that grows out of — and, in turn, shapes — those theories.

Machine representation means a level of formalization that can be expressed by the instruments of mathematics, whereas programming is not more and not less than a special linguistic translation of these mathematical formulae. How these all are related and controlled is a most practical philosophical and computation professional task. Wide experience in the practical fields of computer science, and the research of the underlying theoretical issues have led Vámos to the development of the attitude and activity of constructive skepticism.

This book, like in classical times of Plato and Aristotle, treats individual and communal ethics as intertwined. “Some might think that individual and community must always be opposed to each other. Österberg discusses the concepts in the title in their historical evolution. Today, friendship, love and sexuality are mostly viewed as private, personal and informal relations. In the mediaeval and early modern period, just like in ancient times, this was different. The classical philosophy of friendship (Aristotle) included both friendship and love in the concept of philia. It was also linked to the virtues needed to become an excellent member of the city state. Thus, close relations were a matter of ethics and politics.

What, then, happened to the classical ideas of close relations when they were transmitted to philosophers, clerical and monastic thinkers, state officials or other people in the medieval and early modern period? To what extent did friendship transcend the distinctions between private and public that then existed? How were close relations shaped in practice? Did dialogues with close friends help to contribute to the process of subject-formation in the Renaissance and Enlightenment?

First volume of the Natalie Zemon Davis Annual Lecture Series at Central European University, this small but rich book explores some of the ways in which time matters or should matter to historians. How did Western Christian culture develop its distinctive way of measuring time (BC/AD or BCE/CE) and how does it influence our notion of history? Is modernity an experience of temporality or an ideological construction—a western, and therefore imperialist, imposition?

"Brings together representatives of multiple generations to create a rich examination of the study and practice of Stalinism. The volume is not just a "state of the discipline" collection, in which articles are collected to reflect that current situation of scholarship in a given field; instead, this one includes cutting edge scholarship that will prompt more of the same from other scholars in other fields/subfields. Highly recommended to anyone interested in understanding the technology of Stalinism in both thought and practice."—Nick Miller, Boise State University

"Two decades after the collapse of the communist system, this volume engages a remarkable international team of scholars in a critical re-evaluation of the institutionalization of communist regimes in East-Central Europe and of the period of "high Stalinism." Sovietization is approached as a set of trans-national, multifaceted, and inter-related processes of large-scale institutional and ideological transfers, made up of multiple "takeovers" in various fields. The richness of the source material employed and its comparative scope recommend this book as a major contribution to the study of East-Central Europe's Sovietization."

An autobiographical account of the armed resistance against the Soviet Union, which took place between 1944–1956. Published in English for the first time in unabridged form, Lukša’s memoir remains one of the few reliable eye-witness accounts of the "Invisible Front", as dubbed by Soviet security forces. At its zenith 28,000 guerilla fighters participated in battles and skirmishes throughout Lithuania, Lukša (codename Daumantas) being one of the leaders. Forest Brothers also documents the role of women in the resistance, giving equal credit to these often silent partners.

In 1948 Lukša and two comrades broke through the Iron Curtain on the Polish border. He sought training from the French intelligence and from the CIA. Lukša was flown back into the Soviet Union under the radar on the night of October 4, 1950. He managed to survive and operate eleven months until his near capture and death on the night of September 5, 1951. His memoir, written during 1948–1950, while he was living in hiding in Paris, describes in vivid scenes and dialogue the daily struggles of the resistance.
Before he became a professor at UCLA, Berend had survived five regime changes and two revolutions in Hungary, made a full academic career and was one of the masterminds of regime change in his home country. His memoir offers an interesting case study, a subjective addition to the “objective” historical works on Central and Eastern European state socialism. The book raises basic historical questions and debates, compares East European and American higher education systems, and presents an eyewitness’ insights on life in the United States.

LITHUANIAN JEWISH CULTURE
DOVID KATZ
Vilnius University, Lithuania

A major study of the various cultures of the Litvaks, the Jews of Lithuania; in this context the notion “Lithuania” comprises all of modern day Lithuania, Latvia and Belarus, and chunks of Poland, Ukraine and Russia. This beautiful folio format, with thirty specially commissioned maps and charts and many photographs and facsimiles, traces the culture of the Litvaks from the prehistory of ancient Israel through to Babylonia and Europe, the first manifestations of Lithuanian Jewish culture. The plot line then diversifies to dedicate “equal time” to traditional Talmudic and Kabalistic culture, and to the wide range of more modern forms of Litvak culture, including Hebraism, Yiddishism, Zionism, and Diasporism. Discusses the dynamic interaction between the three languages of this civilization: Hebrew, Aramaic and Yiddish. The final chapter presents the “Last of the Mohegan” Litvaks in Eastern Europe today.

EXPOSED MEMORIES
FAMILY PICTURES IN PRIVATE AND COLLECTIVE MEMORY
Edited by
ZSÓFIA BÁN
Eötvös Loránd University, Budapest
HEDVIG TURAI
Art historian

Within the larger context of cultural memory, family pictures have become one of the most intriguing multi- and interdisciplinary fields of investigation in the past decade. This field brings together artists working in different media (documentary photography and film, photo-based painting and installations, digital art, collage, montage, comics, etc.) as well as academics, critics, theorists and writers working in a wide range of disciplines including literature, history, art history, sociology, anthropology, psychoanalysis, film and media studies, visual culture studies, gender studies, postcolonial studies, and word and image studies. This volume intends to offer a broad, panoramic view of the topic, combining western and eastern European, as well as American perspectives.

OBJECTS OF REMEMBRANCE
A MEMOIR OF AMERICAN OPPORTUNITIES AND VIENNESE DREAMS
MONROE E. PRICE
Annenberg School for Communication at the University of Pennsylvania
Cardozo School of Law, Yeshiva University

A globally recognized media lawyer and communications scholar, Monroe Price was born to a Jewish family in Vienna in 1938. In 1939, his family immigrated to the US where Monroe grew up. The main focus of the whole book is on the question of identity, that of a child of refugees or a 21st-c. scholar and global citizen. A personal introduction to everyday life in early 20th-c. Austria (including Jewish life, the Anschluss, and Kristallnacht). Then scenes of American socialization: family, religion, friends, schooling, as well as deeply personal issues such as home food or intimacy. Through the path of his own life, Price unfolds a more universal story of adjustment, and the relationship between a marginal community and the larger American pull.
The inheritance of the east-European autocratic system frozen up by the communist state was thawed after the regime change, the constitutional revolution, and its components began to be reactivated. "Liberal" and "conservative" have become stigmas in many parts of the world, in line with fascist, reactionary, rightist, bourgeois etc. The attempts to find historic predecessors did not favor an objective approach. There are no serious unbiased syntheses; the political poles of the constitutional revolution and the ensuing period have been described in terms of different conspiracy theories. Dénes establishes distance from the enemy images and their political idioms current in today’s eastern Europe. Provides in depth exploration and analysis required for the portrayal of specific features of conservatism, its strategic vision, conceptual system, argumentation, assessment criteria and values.

Lazăr Vlașceanu, Bucharest University

978-963-9776-49-4 paperback $27.95 / €20.00 / £18.99

A book about the challenges and uncertainties facing today’s university, as well as a chronicle of recent and current changes in higher education in the world. There are many questions today that are sufficiently open to doubt and profoundly related to new developments, to justify new enquiries, by looking freshly and more closely at the actual configurations and at their historical grounds. Vlasceanu discusses the inherent contradiction between academia on the one hand, and expectations and regulations of the market on the other. Analyzes demographic and other statistical characteristics of today’s higher education. Examines the financial basis of universities, and describes current governance models; sets up a new typology of universities.

DIGITAL ACTIVISM DECODED
THE NEW MECHANICS OF CHANGE
Edited by MARY JOYCE
speaker, trainer, writer, consultant and commentator
240 pages, 2010
978-1-932716-60-3 paperback $24.95 / €18.95 / £16.99

The media has recently been abuzz with cases of citizens around the world using digital technologies to push for social and political change: from the use of Twitter to amplify protests in Iran and Moldova to the thousands of American non-profits creating Facebook accounts in the hopes of luring supporters. These stories have been published, discussed, extolled, and derided, but have not yet been viewed holistically as a new field of human endeavor. We call this field “digital activism” and its dynamics, practices, misconceptions, and possible futures are presented together for the first time in this book.

This book compiles a detailed lesson plan produced for a series of workshops that the authors coordinated in Argentina, Mexico and Peru between 2005 and 2007. The workshops were organized in the context of OSI’s Facing Corruption from the Civil Society program, and were aimed at bringing to light the complex conflicts of interest underlying corruption cases and their different roots—social, political, cultural and economic. The lesson plan explores these conflicts through practical exercises, and provides some mechanisms to help participants explore different ways of addressing them. The innovative uses of debate and role play in this work also facilitate the analysis of different policies, their effectiveness and shortcomings.

Local territorial organization at the lowest level of towns, municipalities, and villages has changed in many countries in Central, Eastern, and South Eastern Europe since 1990. The volume presents the experiences gained from all major territorial reforms of the municipal tier implemented in Europe during last decade. Provides insight into all stages of policy process (policy-making, decision-making, policy implementation, and assessment of the outcome) in eleven countries. Although the main focus is on the countries of Central and Eastern Europe, the book also looks at the experiences of Western European states.
