This collection of essays examines the formation and transformation of the memory of communism in the post-communist period. The majority of the articles focus on memory practices in the post-Stalinist era in Bulgaria and Romania, with occasional references to the cases of Poland and the German Democratic Republic. Based on an interdisciplinary approach, including history, anthropology, cultural studies and sociology, the volume examines the mechanisms and processes that influence, determine and mint the private and public memory of communism in the post-1989 era. The common denominator to all essays is the emphasis on the process of remembering in the present, and the modalities by means of which the present perspective shapes processes of remembering, including practices of commemoration and representation of the past. Major thematic blocks revisit specific practices in communism such as popular culture and everyday life, childhood, labor, the secret police, and the perception of “the system”.

Historical Revisionism in Central Europe after 1989

Michal Kopecék

Historical revisionism has galvanized debates in the realm of recent history. The studies range from general accounts of the background to focused analyses of particular phenomena in individual east European countries, from Germany to Ukraine and Estonia. The approach is based on the provocative and instigating intersection of scholarly research, its political appropriations, and social reflection.
The adjustment problems of public finance in countries of Central and Eastern Europe (CEE) are often misunderstood and misinterpreted by western scholars. This book contributes to the bridging of the gap between what is being thought by external observers and what the actual public finance reality is, as described by competent local scholars.

Popular political economy research has remained biased towards advanced countries and has neglected developing and transition economies. Publications on CEE countries’ public finances seem to be reluctant to apply the conceptual framework of standard political economy to these countries because of the assumption that CEE economies are different from their Western peers. But is this really the case? Are CEE economies so much different that none of the well-known “Western” political economy concepts or models can be applied to the analysis of fiscal performance in the region? Benczes demonstrates that they can be safely applied in the context of CEE economies as well.

Fiscal consolidation has significant short term costs which dampen economic growth. Benczes’ multidisciplinary analysis of the relatively new concept of expansionary fiscal consolidations aims to find out whether it is possible to have fiscal consolidation and experience economic growth, even in the short run. This theory is tested on the country with the highest deficit in Central and Eastern Europe.

The book seeks to link theoretical debates on the relevance of trust in economic outcomes with the current arguments about the origins and lessons of the subprime crisis. By what mechanisms does trust influence economic outcomes? Under what conditions do these mechanisms prevail? How do debates about trust help our understanding of the subprime crisis in Europe?
FREE MARKET IN ITS TWENTIES
MODERN BUSINESS DECISION MAKING IN CENTRAL AND EASTERN EUROPE

Edited by
MACIEJ KSIŁOWSKI
Central European University, Budapest

268 pages 978-963-386-044-1 cloth $50.00 / €38.00 / £32.00

This book provides a broadly managerial perspective on key trends that affect business decision-making in Central and Eastern Europe twenty years after the beginning of the region’s transition to market economy. Reflecting different viewpoints, including economic, social, and political approaches, the essays help managers of the region to understand better both regional and the global forces influencing their businesses — as well as to bring to their attention relevant cutting-edge approaches to business thinking and decision-making.

“The story of the rise of democracy and a market economy in Central and Eastern Europe over the past twenty-five years is often told as a series of historic events. But behind these obviously monumental events—sometimes spectacular, sometimes tragic, and often both—lies another story: that of the effort to build the fledging CEE market economies. This largely untold story is less about politicians and more about managers and entrepreneurs seizing remarkable economic opportunities that history has given them”. — from the Introduction by George Soros.

LÁJOS BOKROS

204 pages, 2013 978-615-5225-24-6 cloth $55.00 / €42.00 / £35.00

Bokros, former Minister of Finance of Hungary, has been a frontline actor of post-communist economic transition. His book can be considered a staunch defense of market capitalism and liberal democracy. By highlighting the valiant and painful process of transition and attempting to understand its economics and culture, Bokros contributes to the theoretical (academic) and practical (political) defense of Western civilization.

CAPITALISM FROM OUTSIDE?
ECONOMIC CULTURES IN CENTRAL AND EASTERN EUROPE AFTER 1989

Edited by
VIOLETTA ZENTAI, JANOS MATyas KOVACS

360 pages, 8 tables, 2012 978-615-5211-33-1 cloth $55.00 / €42.00 / £35.00

Comparative studies are offered in three areas: entrepreneurship, governance of economic change, and economic knowledge. The encounters between the economic actors of “East” and “West” have dramatically increased during the past two decades. Chapters reveal how indigenous actors — workers, entrepreneurs, government officials, think tank analysts etc. — in Eastern Europe, select (accept, adjust and mix) certain cultural packages while rejecting others.
This book compares media and political systems in East-Central as well as in Western Europe in order to identify the reasons possibly responsible for the extensive and intensive party control over the media. This phenomenon is widely experienced in many of the former communist countries since the political transformation. The author argues that differences in media freedom and in the politicization of the news media are rooted in differences in party structures between old and new democracies, and notably the fact that young parties in the new members of the European Union are short of resources, which makes them more likely to take control of and to exploit media resources.

The book takes a closer look at five former communist countries (Hungary, Bulgaria, Poland, Romania, and Slovenia) to explain variations in media freedom and the politicization of the news media in and across countries. Done with great precision, it offers detailed case studies of the media policies and party backgrounds of two consecutive governments in each country.

PÉTER MOLNÁR
Central European University, Budapest

540 pages
978-963-386-056-4 cloth
$60.00 / €45.00 / £38.00

Offering an unparalleled geographic scope on a topic that has global relevance, this book is a wide-ranging mix of formal academic analysis, interviews and speeches from an impressive array of people (who are directly and variously involved in monitoring and promoting media free speech, or are engaged in the academic and legal study of media free speech and its violations). The volume includes many different view points from many different angles and more importantly it covers all the modern media platforms and dissemination systems and their corresponding impact upon free speech. The years 1989 and 2011 are highlighted as two recent turning points in historic perspective when freedom of speech and freedom of the press emerged, or powerful efforts were made to support its emergence.

The range of the topics makes this book appropriate to assign in classes in law schools and courses on gender studies, history, international relations, media, multicultural and nationalism studies, political science, philosophy, public policy, and sociology.

MEDIA FREEDOM AND PLURALISM
MEDIA POLICY CHALLENGES IN THE ENLARGED EUROPE

Edited by
BEATA KLIJKIEWICZ

362 pages, 2010
978-963-9776-73-9 cloth
$55.00 / €42.00 / £35.00

The book addresses a critical analysis of major media policies in Europe. The analytical problem-related approach reflects a media policy process as an interrelated part of European integration, formation of European citizenship, and exercise of communication rights within the European communicative space. The question of normative expectations is to be compared with media policy rationales, mechanisms of implementation (transposing rules from EU to national levels), and outcomes.

CZECHOSLOVAK DIPLOMACY AND THE GULAG

DEPORTATION OF CZECHOSLOVAK CITIZENS TO THE USSR AND THE NEGOTIATION FOR THEIR REPATRIATION, 1945–1953

MILADA POLIŠENSKÁ
Anglo-American University in Prague

450 pages
978-963-386-010-6 cloth
$75.00 / €57.00 / £47.00

After the entry of the Red Army into Czechoslovak territory in 1945, Red Army authorities began to arrest and deport Czechoslovak citizens to labor camps in the Soviet Union. The regions most affected were Eastern and South Slovakia and Prague. The Czechoslovak authorities repeatedly requested a halt to the deportations and that the deported Czechoslovaks be returned immediately. It took a long time before these protests generated any response. The subject remained taboo during the Communist decades and sources were out of reach.

Czechoslovak Diplomacy and the Gulag focuses on the diplomatic and political aspects of the deportations. Polišenská explains the steps taken by the Czechoslovak Government in the repatriation agenda from 1945 to 1953 and reconstructs the negotiations with the Soviets.

Thoroughly documented with archival material and statistics, the book tries to answer the question of why and how the Russians deported the civilian population from Czechoslovakia which was their allied country already during the war.

The book offers a systematic survey of existing knowledge about the Soviet regime’s forcible deportations of ethnic and social groups from the revolution to the death of Stalin in 1953. It demonstrates that the use of forced deportations as a mechanism of mass repression was not an innovation in the 1930s, but can be traced back to the earliest days of Bolshevik post-revolutionary state building.

ANU MAI KÕLL

Before collectivization of agriculture in Estonia, “kulaks” (better-off farmers) were persecuted and many of them were deported in 1949. This book is focused on these processes from the perspective of the rural population. Kõll portrays the peaceful resistance as the kulak identifications were challenged. She describes “how” this process worked, whereas the question “why” finds responses in the actors’ life trajectories.
In Hungary, which fell under Soviet influence at the end of WWII, those who had participated in the wartime atrocities were tried by so called people’s courts. This book analyses this process in an objective, quantitative way, contributing to the present timely discussion on the Hungarian war guilt. The authors apply a special focus on the gender aspect of the trials.

Political justice had a specific nature in Hungary. War criminals began to be brought to trial while fighting was still underway in the western part of the country, well before the Nuremberg trials. Not only crimes committed during the war were tried in the same frame but also post-war ones. As far as the post-war period is concerned, legal proceedings regarding these crimes were most often launched on the basis of Act VII of 1946. This act of law concerned “the criminal law protection of the democratic constitutional order and the republic” and its basic aim was to facilitate the creation of a communist dictatorship and to deal with perceived or real enemies of the regime.

The central claim of the book is that all members of the group in whose name collective crime is committed share responsibility for it. Dimitrijevic combines eye witness experience with the best of current scholarship on one of the most serious ethical issues of the day, namely, responding to criminal behavior of a national regime. The monograph discusses reasons for, and the character of, responsibility of decent people.

The comparative presentation of the birth of metropolises like St. Petersburg, Helsinki, Kiev, Belgrade, or Athens confirms the importance of the Western model as well as the influence of international experts on city planning at the periphery of Europe. In addition, this volume presents an alternative perspective that aims to understand the genesis of Eastern European cities with a metropolitan character or metropolitan aspirations as a process sui generis.

The rapid expansion of metropolitan cities such as London and Paris began in the 17th and 18th centuries. Large parts of Central and Eastern Europe underwent urbanization and industrialization with considerable delay. Nevertheless beginning in the second half of the 19th century, the towns in the Romanov and Habsburg empires, as well as in the Balkans grew into cities and metropolitan areas. They changed at an astonishing pace. This transformation has long been interpreted as an attempt to overcome the economic and cultural backwardness of the region and to catch up to Western Europe.

The essays deal with the intersection of issues associated with globalization and the dynamics of core-periphery relations, framed in the larger context of the dynamics between metropolitan areas and their peripheries. The first section deals with the theoretical origins of the core-periphery debate. The second analyzes the interactions between economy and society. The third part is centered around the concept of globalization.

This book is not about war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide, evil, or the killing of a society. It is about a cultural heritage, something vital to a society as a society, something that was not killed in the previous war, something that is resilient.

Through the Window brings an original perspective to folklore of Bosnians at a certain period of time and the differences and similarities of the three main ethnic groups in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It examines the transethnic character of cultural heritage, against divisions that dominate their tragic recent past. The monograph focuses in particular on customs shared by different ethnic groups, specifically elopement, and affinal visitation. The elopement is a transformative rite of passage where an unmarried girl becomes a married woman. The affinal visitation, which follows, is a confirmatory ceremony where ritualized customs between families establish in-laws. These customs reflect a transethnic heritage shared by people in Bosnia as a national group, including Bosniaks, Serbs and Croats.

The Memoirs deal with the travels of Baron Franz Nopcsa (1877–1933), Austro-Hungarian aristocrat of Transylvanian origin, in the Balkans, and specifically in the remote and wild mountains of northern Albania, in the years from 1903 to 1914. This adventurous traveler was also a paleontologist of renown and a noted geologist and ethnographer of the Balkan Peninsula.
Jan Weiss shared the fate of tens of thousands of Czechs and Slovaks, by spending the decisive years of the birth of Czechoslovakia away from his homeland; first on the eastern WWI front, then from 1916 as a POW in Russia, joining later the Czechoslovak Legion (like his world famous colleague Jaroslav Hašek). Upon his return to Prague, Weiss worked as a ministry clerk and began publishing in 1927.

First appearing in 1929, Weiss’ unusual novel soon became a modern classic which has remained in print ever since. Part science fiction, part fantasy, this is a dystopian tale of one man’s quest through an absurd, nightmarish universe ruled by a mysterious, omniscient and almighty dictator, who may just as well be the figment of a delirious imagination. Weiss dazzles with his experimental style and skilful use of fantasy motives and of the dream versus reality theme. Translated into French, German, Italian and Portuguese, this outstanding example of Czech literary modernism becomes available in English for the first time.

THREE CHESTNUT HORSES
Margita Figuli
Slovak writer (1909–1995)
Translated by John Minahane

This gem of Slovak naturalism was written in 1940. The story takes the reader to a mountain village. The protagonist narrates the vicissitudes, suffering, and success he experiences as he pursues a love affair, resulting in the triumph of pure love.

Peter has been in love with a girl—Magdalena—since childhood and asks her to marry him. But he is too late, because a rich man, Jano Zapotočný, has already proposed to Magdalena, a proposal that her greedy mother promptly accepted on her behalf. Magdalena, out of respect for her mother’s wishes, accepts the engagement. However, Magdalena promises Peter that she will put off marrying Jano and will marry him instead if he can prove that he truly loves her. He must build a house and earn a living. After almost two years Peter returns to show her that he kept his promise. But Magdalena is already married; Jano has raped her and she is pregnant. Desperate, Peter is tempted to take out his anger on Jano, nevertheless he resists the impulse. In the end, the author finds a way to reward Peter’s faith in love and morality.

This volume offers an overview of the Lusignan, Genoese and Venetian history of the main port city of Cyprus, a Mediterranean crossroads. The essays contribute to the understanding of Famagusta’s social and administrative structure, as well as the influences on its architectural, artisan, and art historical heritage from the thirteenth to sixteenth centuries. We read of crusader bishops from central France, metalworkers from Asia Minor, mercenaries from Genoa, refugees from Acre, and traders from Venice. Archival sources help reconstruct the early stages of appearances of various buildings. Such research is of vital importance, given the threat to Famagusta’s built heritage by its use as a military base since 1974.

This book describes and analyzes the critical period of 1711-1848 within Hungary. Contrary to conventional interpretations, the study stresses the strong continuity of traditionalism in Hungarian thought, society, and politics, and argues that Hungarian liberalism did not begin to flower in any substantial way until the 1830s and 1840s.

The complex relationship between Austria and Hungary is also focused. A balance is achieved through the use of both Austrian and Hungarian sources, demonstrating the deep cultural differences between the two halves of the Monarchy, closely linked by a mutual recognition that co-existence was preferable to any major rupture.

The case studies of Europe-based empires, whether those of Bourbon Spain, Napoleonic France, Italy, Great Britain, Oldenburg Denmark, Germany, Habsburg Austro-Hungary, Late-Ottoman Turkey or Romanov Russia challenge the dichotomy between empire and nation state that for decades has dominated historiography. The primary focus is on the 19th and early 20th centuries. The authors of the essays identify a number of instances where nation building projects in the imperial metropolis aimed at the preservation and extension of empires rather than at their dissolution or the transformation of entire empires into nation states. Such observations have until recently largely escaped theoretical reflection.

AN EMPIRE OF OTHERS
CREATING ETHNOGRAPHIC KNOWLEDGE IN IMPERIAL RUSSIA AND THE USSR
Edited by
ROLAND CVETKOVSKI
ALEXIS HOFMEISTER

Ethnographers helped to perceive, understand but also to shape Russia’s remarkable cultural diversity. This book focuses on the specific contexts as ethnographic knowledge was created in modern Russia, showing readers how tsarist and Soviet ethnographers simultaneously defined both their subjects and their own expertise over a roughly three-hundred year period.

The essays address fields into which ethnographic knowledge poured — military, mission, history, anthropology, literature etc. — as well as broadening the understanding of knowledge formats — pictures, maps, atlases, plays, tape recordings, lectures, films, posters, museums, exhibitions etc. — noticeably exerting an influence on imperial identities.

JEWISH LIFE IN BELARUS
THE FINAL DECADE OF THE STALIN REGIME, 1944–1953
LEONID SMILOVITSKY

Jewish life in Belarus in the years after World War II was long an enigma. Officially it was held to be as being non-existent, and in the ideological atmosphere of the time research on the matter was impossible. Jewish community life had been wiped out by the Nazis, and information on its revival was suppressed by the communists. For more than half a century the truth about Jewish life during this period was sealed in inaccessible archives. The Jews of Belarus preferred to keep silent rather than expose themselves to the animosity of the authorities. Although the fate of Belarusian Jews before and during the war has now been amply studied, this book is one of the first attempts to study Jewish life in Belarus during the last decade of Stalin’s rule.

THE SOCIALIST WAY OF LIFE IN SIBERIA
THE BURYAT TRANSFORMATION
MELISSA CHAKARS

The Buryats are a Mongolian population in Siberian Russia, the largest indigenous minority. The Socialist Way of Life in Siberia presents the dramatic transformation in their everyday lives during the late twentieth century. The book challenges the common notion that the process of modernization during the later Soviet period created a Buryat national assertiveness rather than assimilation or support for the state.

The first monograph devoted to Buryat history and the Soviet modernization, this study questions common ideas regarding nationalism, identity, westernization, modernity, and the tenacity of ethnicity. The author examines what it has meant to “be a Buryat” and “be a successful Buryat” in three periods: in the Tsarist Russian Empire; under Socialism; and in present-day Russia.

This monograph places the science and ideology of eugenics in early twentieth century Portugal in the context of manifestations in other countries in the same period. The author argues that three factors limited the impact of eugenics in Portugal: a low level of institutionalization, opposition from Catholics and the conservative nature of the Salazar regime. In Portugal the eugenic science and movement were confined to three expressions: individualized studies on mental health, often from a ‘biotypological’ perspective; a particular stance on racial miscegenation in the context of the substantial Portuguese colonial empire; and a diffuse model of social hygiene, maternity care and puericulture.

Nothing in Soviet-style communism was as shrouded in mystery as its secret police. Its paid employees were known to few and their actual numbers remain uncertain. Its files were inaccessible, even to most party members.

With the end of communism, many of the newly established governments—among them Romania’s—opened their secret police archives. From those files, especially her own voluminous one, as well as her personal memories and interviews with acquaintances that turned out be informers, the author has carried out historical ethnography of the Romanian Securitate. The book is not only of historical interest but has implications for understanding the rapidly developing “security state” of the neoliberal present.

The Iron Curtain had its gaps, and this book draws attention to the role of literature in the Cold War in penetrating them, revealing the little-known phenomenon of tamizdat: “publishing-over-there”.

Based on extensive, multi-language archival research, this book is draws from a variety of materials: besides literature and political texts, also interviews, audio and video recordings, exhibition catalogues and handouts, conference papers, and press clippings. This approach allows for a broader look at the whole phenomenon of breaching of the borders by “publishing abroad.”

As relevant in the world of today’s geo-politics as when it was written. This World War II memoir was written by scholar, diplomat and anti-Nazi politician, Antal Ullein-Reviczky (1894–1956) the press chief of Hungary prior to and during the government of Miklós Kállay (1942-1944). This work by Ullein-Reviczky, an erudite, multilingual spokesperson of Hungary in the international arena will resonate for the reader who wishes to better understand recent history in Central and East Europe. As the wartime activities of this dedicated opponent of Hitler generated the fury of the German government including the Führer himself, Prime Minister Kállay found it prudent to send his loyal supporter to neutral Stockholm where he headed the Hungarian Legation from late 1943 through the German occupation of Hungary in March 1944. Married to the daughter of a British consul general in Turkey, Ullein-Reviczky became one of the Hungarian diplomats who turned against the pro-Nazi puppet regime established by the Germans in occupied Hungary and fought against the aggression to the bitter end. He was also fully aware of the growing Soviet threat to his country. This wartime memoir was first published as Guerre allemande, paix russe. Le drame hongrois in 1947 in Switzerland, immediately following the War. This first English edition, translated by his daughter Lovice Maria Ullein-Reviczky, is an invaluable source regarding Hungary’s fate in World War II. Ullein-Reviczky’s book was based partly on the public and private documents he succeeded in saving throughout the war and his long years of exile in Turkey, Switzerland, France and Britain where he died. Written by a well-informed insider and a shrewd observer, his memoir has remained essentially unknown in the English-speaking world and in this new English edition represents an important source of the history of Hungary from German war through Russian peace, giving a unique insight into “the Hungarian tragedy”.

This important work by American historian Jeffrey Taylor, who spent the last two decades in Hungary and earned his PhD at Central European University in Budapest, serves to detail the nineteenth-century origin of the art market in a Central European nation as its economy was shifting from total dependence on agriculture to a mixed industrial/agricultural model during the Industrial Revolution. The creation of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy in 1867 provided Hungary with a measure of equality with Austria, initiating a period when the social and cultural development of Hungary and its newly emerging professional and merchant classes provided a new marketplace, which while bourgeois in nature nevertheless brought “art” to a greater portion of the population. Taylor provides us with a fascinating history, beginning in eighteen hundred, of the art market of Hungary, of the rise of modernism and its conflict with traditional elements.
A European Union with 36 members is a pure working hypothesis today. Extending future territorial contours is in full harmony with one of the main political objectives of the organization as the European Communities offered the possibility of membership to “all European states” from the first day of its existence.

This book sheds new light on the common understanding of the EU budget and common policies, deals with the current challenges and future prospects of the Eurozone, with special focus on pros and cons of further enlargement.

Europe witnessed tectonic shifts in higher education triggered by the Bologna Process. The impact expands even beyond higher education, into the political, economic, and cultural transformations of the continent. From a legal and operational perspective, Bologna is based on a series of voluntary commitments assumed by the ministers responsible for higher education of the participating countries. Their actual implementation takes various forms in different countries. The Bologna Process has been studied extensively. Currently, however, there is no systematic study available about what a participating country has actually committed to do, and how it has implemented these commitments. This policy report attempts to develop such a comprehensive study for the case of one country, Romania.

The book addresses the key dilemmas around the use of force in national security (or counter terrorism) policy and human rights. The anthology offers an overview of the targeted killing program, the decision to go to war in Afghanistan, and the choices involved, as well as looking to the challenges ahead in the use of force in the fight against terrorism. It emphasizes future dilemmas/concerns/ issues, and human rights based approaches to remedy past wrongs and promote rights through the long term.

WHEN YOUNG PEOPLE BREAK THE LAW
DEBATING ISSUES ON PUNISHMENT FOR JUVENILES

When Young People Break the Law is an anthology of scholarly articles and essays that debate the pros and cons of juvenile punishment and of utilizing punishment for juveniles as presently administered by the criminal justice system.

The six thematic sections address the following questions: • What is punishment? • Can punishment be justified? • Should juveniles receive a different kind of punishment than adults? • Should juveniles ever receive a life sentence without parole? • Should the juvenile justice system be reformed? • Are there reasonable alternatives to punishment?

THE CHALLENGE OF ANTI-ROMA POLITICS
ETHICS, LAW, POLITICS

$25.95 / €19.95 / £16.99

The Challenge of Anti-Roma Politics reveals the marginalized situation of most Roma populations in Central and Eastern Europe today. This is in spite of financial and other assistance from the European Union both before and after countries with the largest Roma minorities had been admitted as EU members. The deteriorating conditions of Roma communities form the context for the rise of anti-Roma politics, accompanied by hate speech and crimes and extremist demonstrations. The book discusses how the European Commission, national governments and Roma and pro-Roma NGOs seek ways of countering these developments.

An overview to orient readers is followed by a stark account of conditions in one of Romania’s most deprived ghettos by a leading Roma activist. Lucid explanations of the pivotal role of the EU introduce a set of articles on EU key target areas for action: employment, education, housing and health.
Debate and public speaking are of extraordinary value to students in the high school. Participation in debating can boost student self-confidence, accelerate learning across the curriculum, and facilitate greatly improved critical thinking and oral communication skills.

Speak Up! is a primer for beginning and intermediate students participating in class and contest debates. Designed to support the Public Debate Program, it offers students clear, concise information on public speaking and debating. Combining the practical and theoretical, the text teaches students about verbal and nonverbal communication, how to research and present an argument, how to answer arguments, how to develop debate strategies, and how to conduct a formal debate. Exercises following each section give students hands-on experience with each topic.
